Effect of a Self-Management Program on the Performance of a Complex Task

John E. O'Neil, Robert M. Goff, and Robert M. Goff

Department of Psychology, University of North Carolina at Charlotte, Charlotte, North Carolina

The present study examined the effects of a self-management program on the performance of a complex task. The program consisted of a series of self-management strategies that were designed to help participants manage their time and resources more effectively. The results showed that the program had a significant positive effect on performance, with participants in the self-management group performing significantly better than those in the control group.

Keywords: self-management, complex task, performance, time management, resource management
